Newbridge Silverware, originally known as the Newbridge Cutlery Company was founded in 1934 and is one of Ireland's oldest surviving companies.

ORIGINS

Newbridge was once a Garrison Town. In 1853, with the outbreak of the Crimean War, the British Army had an urgent need for greater training facilities. A barracks was established in Newbridge to train soldiers and war horses for overseas activity. War horses and soldiers were sent from Newbridge to fight in the Crimean and Boer wars as well as World War 1.

The presence of the barracks created a strong local economy in Newbridge. The barracks provided employment for local craftsmen as there was a need for Wheelwrights, Blacksmiths, Farriers and Saddle makers. In 1922, after the formation of the Irish Free State, British Forces withdrew from Newbridge and the barracks lay idle for 12 years. Newbridge became an economic black spot, which led to mass emigration and great poverty. Local craftsmen were redundant.

The original Newbridge Cutlery building (circa 1935), which was located in the vacated British Army Barracks.

In 1933, a local Politician, Senator Cummins formed a committee to consider opportunities to create industrial activity in the vacant Barracks. He had the foresight to see that the old buildings, metal working tools and furnaces could be used to make cutlery and general tableware.

Senator Cummins made his way to Sheffield, home of the world's largest cutlery industry. He encouraged 5 craftsmen and their families to re-locate to Ireland and to transfer knowledge to local workers.

EARLY DAYS OF NEWBRIDGE CUTLERY

In 1934, Cummins succeeded in raising necessary funding from the State and prominent businessmen. A portion of the old army barracks was allocated to the business, old furnaces and machinery were renovated, and 25 local craftsmen were retrained as cutlers.

Notable Irish Businessmen and politicians made up the first board of directors. They included Joseph McGrath, the first Minister for Industry and Commerce. McGrath was a close ally of Michael Collins and he was a member of the team which negotiated with the British Government to secure Ireland's independence. William Norton, the first leader of the Irish Labour Party was also a director.

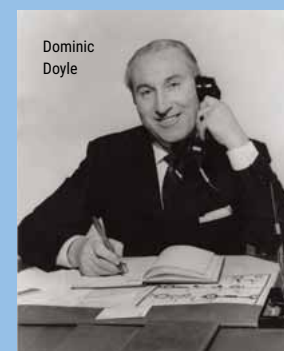

By the 1940s The Newbridge Cutlery Company employed over 600 people. It produced quality tableware for domestic and catering use. The Irish government protected and encouraged the business to grow by imposing duties and quotas on imported competitor products.

The company was at the brink of closure many times during its history but somehow managed to survive through innovation and ingenuity. During the Second World War, when raw materials were scarce, the company relied on recycled old Dublin tram tracks to stay in business.

BLEAK 1970s

In 1973, Ireland joined the EEC. The Irish Government could no longer control the importation of certain products. This led to serious international competition from other countries including Japan and Sheffield. Newbridge Cutlery was severely threatened by this turn of events and was on the verge of closure.

A group of local businessmen pooled their resources and bought the company. Dominic Doyle, father of Newbridge Silverware's current CEO, William Doyle, was one of those businessmen. The new owners decided to focus on the upper end of the tableware market, manufacturing quality silver-plated and sterling silver tableware only. The new direction proved to be a success and the company once again prospered for a time. Dominic Doyle bought out the other business men and became Managing Director in 1978. William Doyle took the helm in the late 1980s.

THE TURNAROUND

In 1993, the company was faced with another crisis. Style preferences changed and consumers were less interested in formal dining. Newbridge Cutlery's products were now seen to be old fashioned and demand fell to the point where the company was once again about to close. There was a need to for a dramatic change.

Through research and development a discovery was made. The craftsmen could make jewellery. They had the skills and the equipment was available. Scrap material left over from manufacturing tableware could be recycled into jewellery. They experimented but had no initial success. Then by chance, an Irish TV presenter, Barbara McMahon learned about the company's attempt to break into the jewellery business.

She told the story on her fashion show "Head2Toe", which had a huge viewer-ship at the time. The publicity made the difference and Newbridge Silverware was born.

Cutting edge design and acclaimed photo shoots with supermodels such as Sophie Dahl, Yasmin le Bon and Naomi Campbell, enhanced the company's brand image. Another milestone for the company was the opening of the Museum of Style Icons in 2007, which now houses one of the world's greatest collections of style, fashion and popular culture artefacts.

TODAY

Newbridge Silverware is now associated with many famous names including Princess Charlene of Monaco, Maureen O'Hara, Bill and Hillary Clinton and many more. The Queen of England used the company's Celtic pattern tableware when she dined at Dublin Castle during her historic first visit to Ireland in 2011. Joan Collins sought rose gold plated Newbridge Silverware tableware for her daughter on the occasion of her marriage in 2016.

The Collection by Amy Huberman

Designed by Amy Huberman, this range of 14 carat gold and silver plated jewellery is inspired by the universe that embraces us - everywhere we go and in everything we do. We wake up in the morning to the sun shining, we go to bed with the moon glowing on us, while the stars sparkle and dance inspiring us to embrace life and never forget or give up on our dreams. The collection reflects sentiments of encouragement and emotion through the subtle affirmation features in every piece.

Sappho Collection

Channelling classical history with our new collection, we have taken our inspiration from the poet Sappho (7th century BC) to name our range. Sappho; arguably the greatest poet of the classical period whose famous line "Someone Will Remember Us..." has inspired our designers to create this very special collection. Our pieces are drawn from all over the classical world from Greece to Egypt and back to Rome, our colours are skimmed from the deep Aegean and Mediterranean Seas where Ptolemy the great geographer drew the first map of Ireland (Hibernia) – later used by Brendan the navigator in his voyages.

Romance of Ireland

Presenting the exquisite Romance of Ireland collection by Newbridge Silverware. Each piece has been meticulously crafted to incorporate the essence of Ireland's most notable landmarks.

From the splendid Georgian doors of Dublin and the nostalgia of the Irish cottage to the majestic setting of Glendalough and the symbolism of the St. Brigid's Cross – this collection serves to embody true Irish heritage. Capturing the lore and beauty of the emerald isle, these timeless keepsakes are destined to be treasured for generations to come.

Service

Make Your Gift Unique...

Newbridge Silverware has long been an ideal gift that becomes a cherished family keepsake and now you can personalise it with a family coat of arms, monogram or sentiment. We have compiled a database of thousands of coats of arms and monograms that can be engraved onto many of our products.

In the beginning, Hagerty developed and commercialised the first Silver Polish with a tarnish preventative. Then, a complete range of silver care products was created for the care of cutlery and fine silverware. The offer was then extended to the care of jewellery; Gold, Silver, Precious Stones and Fine Stones. Today, strong of its more than 120 years of expertise, Hagerty is based in Switzerland and is present in over 70 countries. Hagerty develops and supplies specific care products for: Jewellery, Watches and Accessories/ Decoration items/ Tableware/ Carpet and Textile/ Multi-surfaces with various materials. Taking care of your precious possessions is Hagerty's mission! Newbridge Silverware is the main distributor for Hagerty's in Ireland.
